Little comment on dean's resignation

by Andrew Plank

Engineering Dean George d'Ombain has confirmed that he intends to resign at the end of this year.

"The principal and I have met, and we have agreed that I will resign as of December 31," he said in an interview last night. "My primary concern at the moment is to see this matter concluded by my resignation and the selection of a new dean. The smooth working of the faculty is at this, as at all times, my primary concern."

"The action of the principal is correct in every respect, and I fully accept our agreement that I resign," D'Ombain refused to comment on whether he really wished to resign.

Yesterday, the Daily revealed that d'Ombain had discussed his resignation with the engineering faculty at the closed meeting. He had also circulated a confidential letter within the faculty explaining why he resigned.

When asked about the confidentiality surrounding the whole matter, d'Ombain merely commented, "It's a private matter between myself and the faculty."

As reported in the Daily yesterday, Principal Bell had requested d'Ombain's resignation on the grounds that d'Ombain could not fulfil his present five-year term without violating a rule that no person more than 65 years of age hold an administrative position. When d'Ombain had been accepted for reappointment this year, papers presented to the selection committee falsely indicated that he was three years younger than he actually is. The dean is 62.

D'Ombain was first appointed dean in 1968. His selection for a second term earlier this year was viewed as an unusual move, because deans usually step down after serving one term. The selection committee did not consider other applications, and d'Ombain was considered by some to be Bell's choice for the job.

D'Ombain said that yesterday's Daily report was accurate "except for the implication that my purpose was to illegally extend my deanship beyond its natural term." He said that the papers in question, which falsified his age, had originally been submitted 17 years ago, when he originally applied to McGill and that, therefore, they did not, at the time, bear on his retirement.

Principal Bell said that the rule on a retirement age "on the whole is a good rule." He said he was not willing to comment very much on d'Ombain's resignation. "This is a matter that's personal to him. If he is willing to publicly discuss it, I'll join him," he said.

"The dean was appointed on my recommendation after consulting the advisory committee. The committee and I agreed at the time that it would be a good idea to reappoint him."

Bell added, "If a man feels he has to resign, he has to resign. Nobody has to give reasons for resigning."

When asked whether he considered the dean's resignation a loss to the university, Bell simply replied, "Yes." He did not elaborate.

When asked why he had requested the dean's resignation only now, even though already last spring there had been rumours that the dean's submission to the committee contained discrepancies regarding his age, Bell replied, "I have nothing more to say about this subject."

Principal Bell: "If a man feels he has to resign, he has to resign."

Students in the engineering faculty yesterday seemed disappointed. Most of those interviewed by the Daily said that d'Ombain has always been very popular with the students, enjoying a good rapport with them. He has attended many student activities, they said, and he will be missed. Nobody seems to be concerned that he has been accused of lying.

There has been talk of petitioning against d'Ombain's resignation. But d'Ombain said, "I object as a matter of principle to any pressure groups, be they directed against myself or against the principal or against anybody else."

Technicality stops day care for now

by Vera Mesenzew

The Judicial Committee has dismissed the hearing on day care on a technicality. The committee issued a statement Wednesday saying that before it can rule on the issue, the McGill Day Care Co-operative (MDCC) must prove it is an incorporated body.

The committee had been asked to order a check-off system in accordance with the terms of the day care resolutions passed in an open meeting of the Students' Society last March 7, and to order payment to be made to the MDCC based on the results of such a check-off, also in accordance with the open meeting resolutions.

The open meeting had called for a check-off system to be set up to let those students who did not wish one dollar of their Students' Society fees to go to day care to indicate that. Instead, the Students' Society executive arranged a regular vote asking students whether they wanted their money to go to day care.

The original resolutions also called for the money to be turned over to the MDCC. But Students'

Society President Paul Drager said he would challenge the resolutions, which he said were poorly written and could present difficulties, and withheld the money until the Judicial Committee could reach a decision.

Emphasizing that the March 7 resolutions speak of the MDCC as an incorporated body and that it is to this body that funds are allegedly owed, the Judicial Committee said that any action it took before the MDCC was incorporated would be premature. Since the MDCC was unable to prove it was incorporated by the deadline the committee set, the committee dismissed the hearing.

The committee added, however, that if it can be proved that the MDCC is incorporated, as new action can be launched.

Students' Council arts and science representative Will Hoffman, petitioner for the MDCC, said he plans to bring the matter to the Judicial Committee again as soon as the MDCC is incorporated.

Hoffman said the decision was not much of a setback for the MDCC, calling it "just an unfortunate delay for the people involved in establishing a day care centre and for the children who need it."

He said, however, that it was unfortunate that the main substance of the case — concerning the check-off system and the constitutionality of the motions — had not been resolved.

"To focus on this technical decision would be a mistake. The real question is why is Mr. Drager and the executive so intent on preventing this day care centre from being set up?"

Drager said his stand on day care had been misinterpreted. He said he was not against day care, but supported it.

The reason the Students' Society executive had to fight the resolution, he said, was that the resolution "binds every future Council to allocate money towards a day care centre." He said each Council should have control of its own budget.

Council would also be bound to give funds every year to a group without them having to supply any kind of budget, Drager said. In effect, Council would have full responsibility, but no authority or control over funds. Nor would it have any guarantee that the funds would go towards the day care centre.

Now that the Judicial Committee hearing has been dismissed, Drager said he hoped to do something constructive about day care. "I hope that now we can sit down together with representatives from both MDCC and the MCFC (McGill Community Family Centre), forget about the legal hassles, and set up a day care centre for the students."

Drager said he was aware of the need for day care at McGill. "The MCFC which has been running a day care centre on campus has a waiting list for children that is astounding. The need is there. Now let's do something about it."

Radio seeks court order

Radio McGill is seeking an injunction to prevent National Cablevision from interfering with its Greek-language programming.

Radio station manager Morrie Altmejd said the company has broken its contract with Radio by cutting off several broadcasts aimed at the Greek community. He will appear in a provincial civil court this morning to ask for a temporary injunction forcing National Cablevision — which carries many Radio shows — to "stop cutting our lines pending a settlement of this thing in court."

A Greek-language station, CHCR, has been pressuring National Cablevision to prevent Radio McGill from carrying Greek-language programs, saying Radio's programs cut into CHCR's audience. CHCR is also carried over National Cablevision.

Altmejd said the programs that have been interfered with include "certain Greek shows that I believe National Cablevision is getting a lot of pressure about from right-wing people in the Greek community." He said "most of the Greek community" wants Greek programming to continue over Radio McGill.

UQAM professors set to strike

by Arnold Bennett

The Montreal branch of the University of Quebec (UQAM) may soon be hit by its second faculty strike since 1971. As the Daily went to press last night, the negotiating committee of the Syndicat des Professeurs de l'Université du Québec (SPUQ) was making a detailed report to the union council on the latest administration contract offers. The final strike decision is up to the union general assembly, which will meet Sunday.

As of Wednesday morning, before the latest offers, the UQAM administration was still trying to wipe out the rights won in a three-week strike in October 1971. The union is set on defending the acquired rights of its workers and has also presented new demands dealing with control of working conditions, job security, and comparative salary scales.

In separate general assemblies Wednesday, UQAM students and maintenance workers voted overwhelmingly to support the professors in their struggle with the administration. A similar show of solidarity helped the professors win the 1971 strike. Even after they had won their demands in 1971, the professors refused to return to work until the administration reversed its decision not to pay maintenance workers who had refused to cross the picket lines.

According to SPUQ spokesman Madeleine Gagnon, the administration's first position in the current negotiations was to cut back all the 1971 gains in union recognition, job definitions, job security, and salary scales.

The contract won in 1971 stipulated that SPUQ was the only bargaining agent for UQAM faculty, that professors would be represented on the university's academic policy committee and on its administrative council, and that department heads would be elected by and responsible to the professors in their departments.

But before the latest offers, the administration wanted department heads to be responsible to both the professors who elected them and to the administration. "This, of course, would be an impossible situation for the department heads," said Gagnon.

Under the 1971 contract, all professors had the right to grievance procedure and arbitration, whether or not they had permanent status. But at the start of the present negotiations, the administration wanted to take these rights away from non-permanent faculty.

Also, job security was automatic for permanent faculty under the 1971 agreement. But as of two days ago, the administration was saying that job security would not be automatic except in cases of the closure or fusion of academic programs.

One of the few clauses of the 1971 contract now acceptable to both faculty and administration was the one abolishing traditional tenure and substituting "permanence." The difference is that tenured professors are almost irremovable, while under permanence they have job security but are subject to evaluation every term by their students and professional colleagues.

The criteria for evaluation are teaching, research, service to the collectivity, and administrative and tutorial skills. Professors who are judged incompetent lecturers by their students and colleagues, for example, can be "recycled" into research or some other job. The 1971 strikers emphasized this demand as their justification for calling on students to support

As for new demands, SPUQ wants to defend the job security of its members by cutting the percentage of non-professors teaching courses from 40 per cent to 15 per cent.

SPUQ also wants working conditions improved by the reduction of teacher ratios — to one to 16 for undergraduates.

A key new demand is for the effective control of working conditions by the professors. SPUQ wants the university's academic policy committee, which has six professors and four administrators, to have full control of academic and teaching policies. According to Gagnon, the administration had illegally bypassed this committee in the past two years and has made decisions unilaterally. To ensure that this does not happen again, the union wants the committee's power written into the new contract.

PABLO NERUDA CULTURAL EVENING

A cultural evening on Pablo Neruda will be held tomorrow night at 8 p.m. at the University of Montreal. The program includes an audio-visual presentation on the life of the late Nobel Prize-winning poet, a conference on his literature, a talk on his political life, and poems and songs performed by the folk group Le Quinchamalis. The evening proceedings will be entirely in French. At the "grand salon" in the U of M community centre, 2332 Boulevard Eduard Montpetit.

YIDDISH DRAMA GROUP

GOLEM presents the YIDDISH GROUP OF THE SAIDYE BRONMAN CENTRE production of "IF YOU WILL IT, IT IS NOT A LEGEND". On Saturday November 17, at Redpath Hall, McGill University, starting at 8 p.m.

The production will be directed by Dora Wasserman, founder and director of the group, and a graduate of the Moscow Yiddish Art Theatre.

"LEGEND" is a salute to Israel. It is not a play, but rather a collection of vignettes, interspersed with song and dance. Much of the music is the original composition of Eli Rubenstein. The sketches do not propagandize or proselytize, it is just a portrayal of the lives, the humour, the tears, and the feeling of the people.

Admission for students and golden agers $1.25, adults $2.50. All proceeds will go to the ISRAEL EMERGENCY FUND. Info 845-9171.

Firestone tire boycott called for tomorrow

by Eugene Lancaric

A province-wide boycott day for Firestone tires has been called by striking Firestone workers and their supporters for tomorrow.

The workers at Firestone's Joliette plant have been on strike since May of this year. Their demands are principally for parity with their fellow workers at Firestone plants in Hamilton, Ontario and in the United States, for grievance procedures, and for French as their working language.

Over the past several months, the Firestone strike has become one of the most militant struggles in Quebec, with the workers battling both the company and the U.S.-based United Rubber Workers union. The international union has consistently applied pressure on the workers to settle for much less than their demands and has threatened to cut off strike funds.

The Firestone strike has set an example for many other workers in Quebec, because the workers have set up on their own initiative a rank-and-file organization, the Committee of 30, to negotiate with the company and to lead the strike. This committee, which has now grown to fifty members, has also organized study groups for the workers around such subjects as the role of unions in a capitalist society and ways workers can strengthen their organizations. The wives of the strikers have also organized a group to study the role of women under capitalism and to give support to their husbands in the strike.

The workers have emphasized that tomorrow's boycott day represents an important step in the development of support for the Firestone strike all over Quebec. Picket lines will be set up at Firestone dealers in Sept-Îles, Rouen, Quebec, St-Jerome, Trois-Rivières, Sherbrooke, St-Jean, and all over the Montreal area. Picketing has already been going on in Montreal for the past three weeks. A solidarity committee for the Firestone strike composed of worker, community and student groups, has been at work in Montreal since the middle of October, and similar groups are getting under way in other cities.

The Workers' Support Committee-McGill, a member group of the city-wide solidarity committee, has urged all students to join in the picketing at Firestone stores tomorrow. Picketers will be meeting at the offices of the committee, 5352 St-Dominique, at 9 a.m. Transportation and day care will be provided.

Chinatown study to start soon

by Michael LeDonna

The McGill Chinatown Destruction Study Committee, proposed by External Vice-President Earle Taylor early in November to see whether Chinatown can be saved from proposed destruction, will elect officers and "start work right away," according to committee member Wei Chin.

Chin, a past president of the McGill Chinese Students' Society, is also a member of the Chinatown-based group Canadian-Chinese Cultural Society of Montreal. Chin said this group was organized in 1969 "to preserve Chinese culture and way of life in Montreal."

Chin said the McGill group will work closely with the Cultural Society and with several business men in Chinatown. He said one of the group's major problems is that "there are only two or three business men who know how to deal with the government; the rest are immigrants and wouldn't know what to do."

Chin conceded that the committee's ability to take action is limited because of the number of building contracts already signed. For instance, he said, the area on which a Catholic church now stands has been leased to the federal government for 99 years, and the government is expected to replace the church with a high-rise office building.

"It may be too late to do anything about the Catholic churches and the eastern section of Chinatown, but the west has not been sold yet," Chin said. The western section includes the strip of restaurants on LaGauchetière Street West.

Chin urged students to write to newspapers and other "centres of power" about the Chinatown issue and asked anyone interested in helping to get in touch with Earle Taylor.

More foreign students in Canada, forum told

by Neil Boers

A member of the Canadian Bureau of International Education says there are more foreign students in Canada than ever before and suggests that some university courses are not relevant for these students.

Addressing a workshop yesterday on the problems of foreign students, Allen Rix urged universities to "get their houses in order" — in accepting non-Canadian students as well in providing relevant course content for them. Many university acceptance policies are confusing to foreign applicants, he said.

Rix said the reason there are more foreign students in Canada is that many non-Europeans who previously could study in Europe are now barred from there by Common Market regulations.

Another speaker at the workshop — John Beggs, from the Canadian Internal Development Agency — said the Canadian government has recently started "project-oriented" training for non-Canadians, geared to specific jobs in the home country. Before 1970, he said, Canadian programs were on a general scholarship basis and would guarantee to train a certain number of people from each country. Beggs said there should be overseas advisers to get students in touch with Canadian employers.

A representative from Canadian Manpower said that new laws enable students who were in Canada before January 1, 1973 to obtain employment visas. Others can obtain visas only if the prospective employer writes out an offer of employment, which she said, can be a problem because employers may not want to be bothered with the red tape.

Other speakers discussed housing discrimination, the role of the Third World student in Canada, and job opportunities.

Choo Wai Hong, president of the International Students' Association, which was one of the sponsors of the workshop, said she hopes seminars like these will make the McGill community aware of the problems of foreign students and will produce greater co-operation between the various government agencies and foreign students. Both sides can learn from this type of seminar, she said.

Baillie confident

Redmen en route to Prairie Bowl

by Elliot Pap

Stop! Look up! Do you see an airplane? Is it an Air Canada plane? Is it flying to Winnipeg? Well if it is, wave to the guys on the Redmen football team 'cause they're on that plane.

Yes, it is true. Our heroes of the gridiron are on their way to Winnipeg where they will meet the University of Manitoba Bisons in Saturday afternoon's Prairie Bowl. The contest is a do-or-die affair, with the winners advancing to the College Bowl (THE Championship) and the losers advancing to the off-season.

Hey coach Charlie Baillie, you going to win the game?

"I'm confident."

Now that may not mean much to the average reader but it is significant to at least one person — yours truly. Coach Baillie has said many things since our first interview way, way back in August and he has never been wrong. In other words, he knows what he is saying, and when he says he is confident the Redmen will win, who am I to argue?

Most of you are probably chuckling about my gullibility. You think I've been had. You remember how badly Quebec teams have been beaten by those (shudder!) Western powerhouses in the previous Prairie Bowls. Well stop chuckling, because the Redmen will not be embarrassed by Manitoba. Heck, they might even win!

Victory a tall order

There is no doubt that victory will be a tall order. The scouting reports say that the Bison defensive line is a big line and that running up the middle might be a problem. Their pass defence is quite good and their linebackers do not blitz very often. Whatever are the Redmen going to do against these guys?

"We won't be making any drastic changes," said Baillie. "We'll go with our regular running game while the passing game will have a few wrinkles."

And what do the Bisons feature offensively?

"They use a power-I which will put a lot of pressure on our defensive ends, outside linebackers, and cornerbacks. They have very good blocking from their men in the backfield as well."

For those of you who don't know what a power-I is, I am afraid you are out of luck if you are expecting a detailed explanation. However, I can say that it is something akin to the wishbone. (Actually I know exactly what the power-I is because I saw the films, but it is a long-winded explanation with which I do not wish to involve myself.)

Finally, remember those ten players who were not going out west because there wasn't any money to take them? Unbelievably, a sugar daddy was found. This is not a rumour as I saw the ten plane tickets with my very own cute little brown eyes. Maybe there is some hope for mankind after all.

PAP CRAP: If anyone is still wondering about the Daily following the Redmen, stop wondering. Although a sugar daddy was found for the players, no such luck befell this scribe. What a tragedy (sob)...By the way, the Redmen will be returning on Sunday at 5 p.m. See you at the airport...

In Monday's Daily, we had a picture of the Redmen football coaches holding the QUAA championship trophy. Today, in the interests of fair play and equal time for all, we proudly present one of the Redmen players holding that very same trophy.

Cagers open season

The McGill Redmen [basketball version] open their season tomorrow afternoon in the Currie Gym. Game time is 3 [three] p.m. and the Laval Rouge et Or will form the opposition. Laval, led by Pierre Dion is rumoured to have a strong team. Dion did not play last season but was an all-star the year before. Redmen assistant coach Ira Turetsky summed up his team's chances with this understatement, "If we play well, we'll win. On the other hand, if we play as we did in our exhibition games, we could be in a lot of trouble." Thank you, Ira Turetsky.

Don't forget, basketball fans, tomorrow afternoon at three. Be sure to be there.

Now that we have your attention focused on hockey, the McGill Redmen [hockey version, obviously] are travelling to Kingston, Ontario tomorrow for an exhibition game against RMC.

Shutouts featured in intramural ice hockey action

by Ken Abramovitch and Fulvio Bussandri

After the first week of action in the McGill Intramural Ice Hockey League, one would think that this year's goalie crop is exceptionally good. Of the eight games played last week, five were shutouts. However, one shouldn't jump to such quick conclusions because, on further inspection, we see otherwise.

Three of the five shutouts were scored by goalies in the WHA... Very rarely is a game ever defaulted in the Faculty League but after last week's occurrence, this statement can no longer be adhered to. Both Science B and Grad Studies picked up easy 1-0 victories over Law B and Dent. B respectively, as the losers forgot to show up. If any of you aren't sure whether you have a game or not, don't hesitate to phone the Intramural "Hot Line" (392-4321).

In the other whitewash, Med B beat Architecture 4-0. Elsewhere, Education B got goals from Jean Choiniere and Lance Dalton and edged Engineering B 2-1.

Highlighting WHA action last week was Mgmt B's convincing victory over Arts B. Arts B, who are really the Arts A (NHL) players masquerading in the WHA, still were not good enough to beat Mgmt B. It serves them right for trying to take advantage of a loophole in the SIRC league formations. John Lucka, Claude Proulx, Pete Berg and Mike Sellos each scored once for Mgmt. Arts, who had four power play opportunities in the game, could do no better than the single tally by Dave Mackenzie. Final score Mgmt B 4 — Arts B 1.

In the NHL, Mgmt A were not quite as successful. Paced by two goals from Robbie Barnett, and some hot goal tending by Jim Pluda, Science A beat them 2-0. Pluda, who earned the shutout, wasn't very busy stopping only four shots. However, one was on a breakaway and the other three were all from close in. An unfortunate side note in that game was the broken nose suffered by Science's Arthur Cohn. But don't worry, it will take more than a broken nose to keep him out of the next game.

Elsewhere in the NHL, Dent A got an early goal from Dave Bridger after eleven seconds in the first period, but Law A retaliated in the next two minutes with two unanswered goals and went on to win 3-1.

In the rematch between last year's intramural finalists, the league champs, Med A, proved true to form as they plastered the Engineers 4-0. Word had it that the Engineers weren't really up for that game because they were too involved in the intramural touch-football championship. Forwards like Ken Major were skating down the ice looking for the long bomb instead of rebounds and defence-men like Barry Einarson were so busy taking the wingers man on man that they forgot all about the centre (or is it the QB?) who usually ended up scoring.
